

Ancestral Migration Project

In Mrs. Meinen's class, we are studying about how all people of different backgrounds had ancestors migrate to the Americas at one point. That's why we all created a doll that represents our cultural background. For example, a person with a Japanese background might dress their doll in samurai armor or an English background might be wearing a soldier's uniform. We made our dolls out of any material, like shredded papers, 3D objects, or preferably fabric pieces. These outfits and dolls were needed to be glued upon construction paper next to an autobiopoem. This autobiopoem had to have the content that would address the reader about your own culture. We also had to tell the reader a little bit about ourselves. Lastly, Mrs. Meinen required us to fill the background of our dolls with creative objects like 3D pop-ups or a drawing of a scene that reflects our cultural background. It was really fun to create and we hope you enjoy them too!

By: Christopher Chow

